SECTION A: Comprehension

Read the following passage and then answer the questions about it:

(10)

Edward Smith had the misfortune to lose his mother at birth but was fortunate enough to be brought by a maternal aunt who lived in Bristol (England). In time he graduated from the Naval School at Bristol and immediately joined the Bristol Navy as a midshipman. Because of his efficiency and devotion to his work, he was promoted to Captain at the end of the second year of his service. Edward's father, a high-ranking civil servant in the Government of Singapore died in Singapore in 1955. Mr. Smith senior was buried here. As fate would have it, Edward had not been able to attend the funeral. He had been away at sea at the time, and the news of his father's death had only reached him the day after the burial.

However, since then, he had made it a point to come out to Singapore every two or three years to visit his father's grave.

One year Edgar found himself in Singapore with the British Naval Forces who were conducting naval exercises in the Far East with Australia, New- Zealand, Malaysia, and Singapore. After the successful conclusion of the exercise, the men were allowed ashore for a well-earned rest. Edward, of course, made straight for the cemetery. At his father's graveyard, he weeded the grass, tidied up the plot, and placed some flowers on the tombs. Whilst he was doing this, he noticed an elderly Chinese man putting a bowl of rice, some meat, and some fruits on the next tomb. He also saw the man kneeling down and praying. Edward was touched. For he too had come to pay respect to a dead man whom he had once loved.

Soon both men had completed their duties and were about to leave. Wanting to show his friendliness, Edward asked the old man in good humor, "When do you think your relative will rise up out of the grave to eat the food you have given him? The man thought deeply for a while and then replied with a faint smile, "Well I 'm not too sure. But I think he will get up at the same time your relatives get up to smell the flowers you brought him." And with this, both men burst out laughing heartily. Edward was very impressed by the old man- by his witty and appropriate reply. The old man felt warmed towards Edward for remembering his dear departed father.

Without further ado, the two men embraced each other quickly. Then each went his separate way.
